

HEALING

While all bodies are unique and can experience their own issues during healing- your piercer will give you an average healing time to expect. During this time it is extremely important to stay on top of aftercare and take extra precautions with your fresh piercings to avoid further issues.

HEALING, AFTERCARE, AND WHAT'S THE DEAL WITH DOWNSIZING??

New piercings are exciting but angry piercings are no fun. Here's our simple care guide to taking care of your new bling! Here's the basics:

- listen to your piercer
- keep it clean
- downsize on time
- don't soak it
- don't touch it

CLEANING

When cleaning your healing piercing there are only TWO things we recommend for use.

- hot water
- sterile saline/wound wash

You can spray or rinse the piercing directly or choose to utilize small tipped make up applicators. Small crusties and oils can sometimes build up around your jewelry, gently wipe them away and then dry your piercing! Think of it like a scab, picking and scratching could prolong your healing, so do your best to let your body do its job!

DOWNSIZING

To accommodate for the normal swelling that comes with a fresh piercing, we pierce you with a longer post/barbell. After about 4-6 weeks your swelling will likely settle and your piercing will be ready for a tighter fit. Schedule a downsizing appointment and we'll swap your original one out for you.
